Start 10:23 PM

There is a cart or a table of wood, a wooden flat horizontal surface, it takes up most of the screen.

This time I did a bit differently, in that I held my eyes closed and then clicked and left my eyes closed for a little while, while trying to focus for the task at hand and telling myself that the target is the picture that will appear instead of the gray box later on. The five picture options are as usual hidden.

I try to close my eyes, focus on the signal or task, then open my eyes to see the gray box again. This time I find a stone mason pillar structure in the center or just left from center, standing upright, and made of black stones.

Can I somehow pretend that this one is the same kind of target as with the individual targets since I do so much better on the individual targets?

There is a narrow gap in the center of the picture, this is similar to the element I saw of the tall mason pillar.

10:30 PM I want to see the five pictures.

A wasp on a green leaf, a leaning sailship out at sea, a red ribbon on a present, the interior of a kitchen with light colored wood, tiger against snow.

Table was my first initial element, but I recognize the sailship as the narrow vertical element.

Let's go with the initial element so I choose the kitchen.

The target was the wasp. Come to think of it, the black structure I drew, with the gap in between, looks like the body of the wasp even the gap is on the wasp in between the wings on its back. What would have happened had I spent more time on probing the elements? I will try that with the next one, to do a thorough job.

10:35 PM End notes.
